Buy a Blanket, Support Anishinabek Children

Aboriginal children are being removed from their homes and communities at disproportionate rate and the number rises every year. If they were any other child living in Ontario, they would have access to services that support and assist their families. Instead, both the federal and provincial governments underfund First Nation child welfare and the result is thousands of First Nations children who are raised away from home and become disconnected from their families and identities.

The Anishinabek Nation is working on developing and implementing a Child Welfare Law that will assist in protecting Anishinabek children and supporting their families and communities. Buying a blanket helps ensure that Anishinabek Nation citizens, community leaders, young people, parents, and front line workers will all have their say in the drafting of this law and that they will be communicated with every step of the way.
